As an advisor/consultant, would you like to be able to use the EPICS website to collaborate with the students?

7 responses

How do you feel about the aesthetic appeal of the website

7 responses

(1: Outdated; 5: Modern)

Tools to increase collaboration with students:

- Slack
- Zoom
- Updated project/contact info
- A more set schedule

Most challenging part of working with student groups in the past:

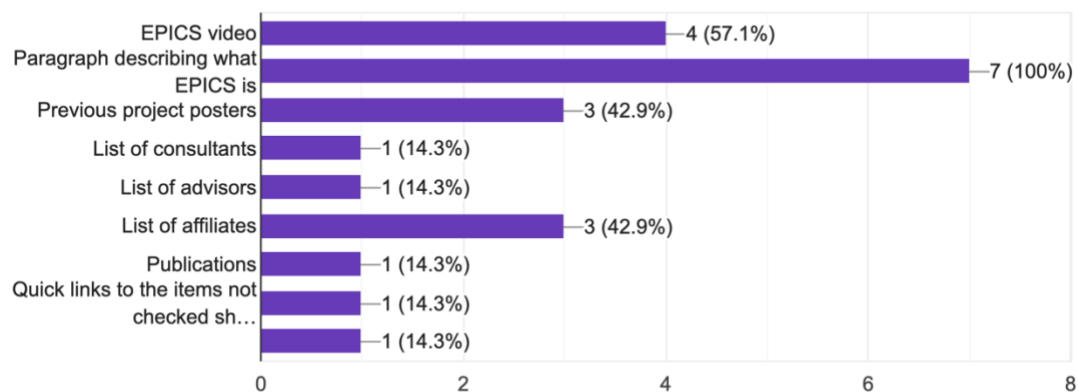

- Not getting involved early in the semester

- Knowing what they need & have a clear product roadmap

Note: From other responses: consultants are being underutilized

What information do you think should be presented on the EPICS website homepage?

7 responses

EPICS homepage:

1. Paragraph describing what EPICS is
2. EPICS video
3. Posters
4. List of affiliates

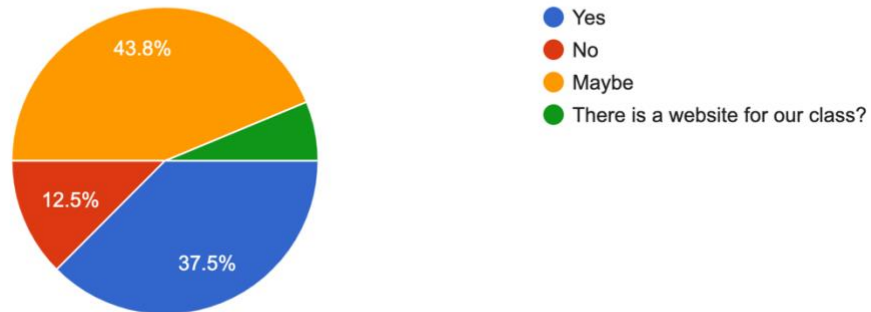

Other notes:

- Not mobile friendly
- Are there any other materials accessible by logging in?

Student Responses:

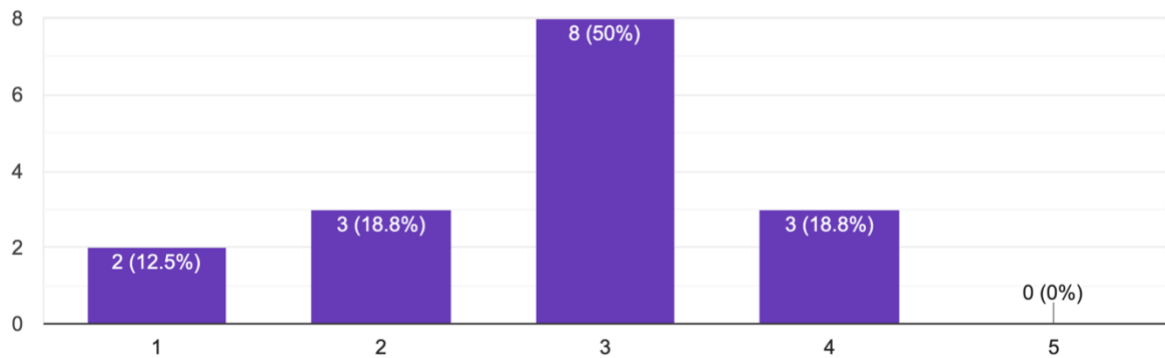

Do you see the EPICS website as a useful tool as is right now?

Easier interaction with stakeholder:

- Page stakeholder could see to track progress
- Some way to attain feedback from stakeholder (message system)
- Email
- Blog feature

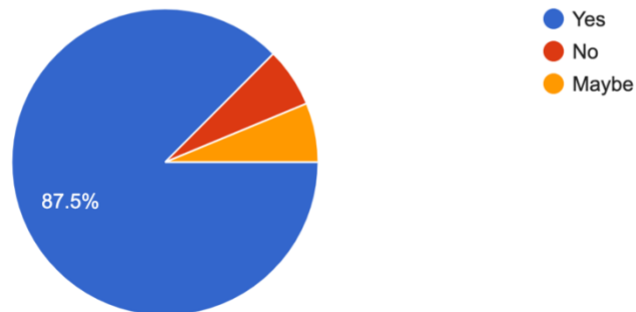

How likely are you to reach out to a consultant for help on your project?

16 responses

Would you be more likely to reach out to a consultant if there was an easy way to do it on the EPICS website?

16 responses

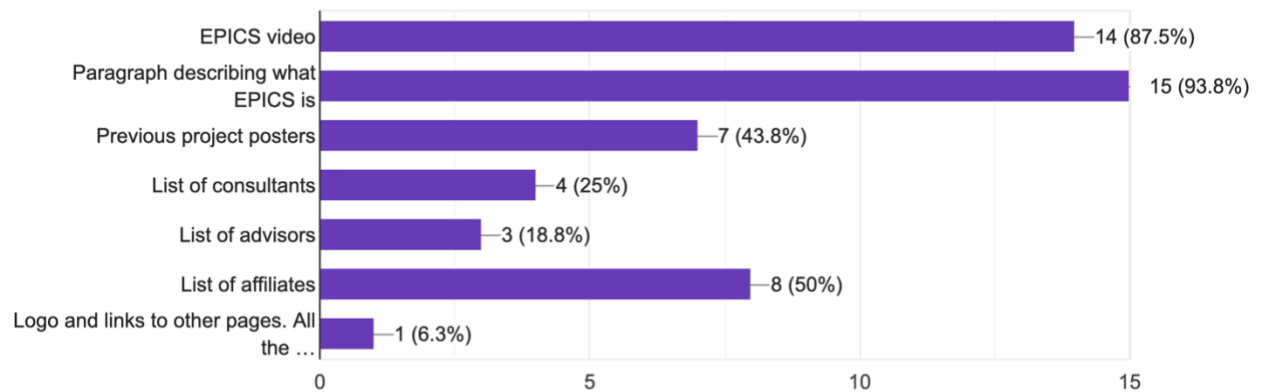

Most challenging part about product transition:

- Lack of communication
- Lack of sharing files/ease of access to old artifacts
- Lack of background on previous group's work
- Little to no documentation
- Understanding previous groups projects/spring goals
- Getting access to all their information

What information do you think should be presented on the EPICS website homepage?

16 responses

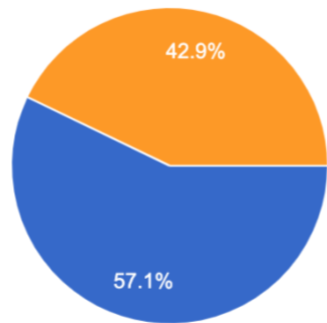

Other info:

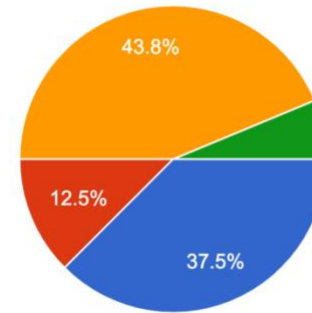

- I think it would be great to have this website be more for the clients than for the teams. I feel like we, as teams, don't actually really use the website. We all have our own ways of communicating and staying up to date, so this website just doesn't seem very useful for the actual teams.
